

1 Replication study. In our replication across three hardware platforms, the process-in-memory configuration increased measured off-chip data movement by 12 percent relative to the baseline, the opposite of the direction previously reported.

2 Method. Three hardware platforms, ten random seeds, full control configuration measured.